ECCLESIASTICAL CAREER OF THE APOSTOLIC COLLECTOR PETRUS DE MONASTERIO*

In 1881 Pope Leo XIII (1878-1903) opened the Vatican Secret Archives for scientific researchers,¹ which was followed by intensive historical research in the Camera Apostolica's as well. As a result of this work, a survey of the Collectoriae series of the which contains the papal tax-collectors's account commenced as well. Simultaneously, a study of the collectors' institution awoke the researchers' interest. The career analysis of the papal tax-collectors as well as research into the activity of the collectors on the basis of sources and in a wider context belong to the popular subject-matters of the international historiography until these days.² Due to the science promoter work of Vilmos Fraknói (1834-1924), the account of those papal tax-collectors, who worked in Hungary during the 13th and 14th centuries, appeared in 1887 within the first series (in the first book) of the Monumenta Vaticana Hungariae.³ In spite of this fact, the Hungarian medieval studies did not focus on further details in connection with this topic in the 130 years after that followed the publication of this volume; for example the character of the tax-collectors, details related to their activities such as the personal and material terms of their work, as well as the nature of the relationship with the Curia. The introduction to this volume, written by László Fejérpataky (1857-1923) and published (in a more detailed version) in the Századok journal in the same year, is until today the only summary prepared by a Hungarian author, which acquaint the readers with certain aspects of the topic.⁴ In the last few years, historical Hungarian research has started to rediscover the medieval documentation of the Camera Apostolica. The most important result of this research is a two volume source book,⁵ which was introduced in Budapest in January, 2015 by Mons. Sergio Pagano, bishop prefect of the Vatican Secret Archive.⁶ This present study should be considered in the same light as this systematic research work, as it focuses on the ecclesiastical career of an “unfamiliar acquaintance” the papal collector.

shorter extract (computus abbreviatus) as well.⁷ Besides his account, several other curial documents and some in partibus arisen charters have remained to our present era in connection with his work. This documentation collectively makes a detailed analysis of his activity possible. On the bases of this, we are able to gain a complex picture about his work as a collector, among others in particular: the sphere of authority, the infrastructural conditions of the collection of taxes, the possibilities related to the communication with the centre and about the route that the money was transported.⁸ Peter, the son of Stephen, who was the canon of Eger and the archdeacon of Szabolcs, was nominated to become the leader of the Polish-Hungarian collectoria by Pope Gregory XI (1371-1378).⁹ After the long lasting diplomatic discussions between the Holy See as well as the Hungarian (1342-1382) and Polish (1370-1382) King Louis I, he could start his work in the Polish Kingdom during the spring of 1373 and in Hungary in December.¹⁰ After he had finished his work during the autumn of 1375, he travelled to Avignon so that he would be able to hand in his final accounts.¹¹ During this period, he forwarded altogether 22,848 forints to the Apostolic Chamber.¹² It seems to be certain that his work was effective, because during the December of 1375 and at the beginning of the following year, he received a new commission to the previously-mentioned regions.¹³ Unfortunately, we have very limited information related to his career after this period. In addition, we do not know the exact date when he finished this second commission. In September 1376, the Chamber issued a receipt to him for the payment of 200 golden ducats.¹⁴ He appears as a collector for the last time on 8th April, 1378, when he issued a certificate for the bishop of Veszprém in Buda.¹⁵

If we would like to gain further information about Peter, the son of Stephen, and if we would like to find answers to the question, of why exactly he was chosen by the Apostolic Chamber, then we have to turn to the details of Peter's ecclesiastical career. This is highly relevant, as we can find different identifications in the theoretical literature through the benefices he gained (or which were claimed to by himself). László Fejérpataky identified him with Petrus de Monasterio,¹⁶ János Temesváry with Petrus Knol,¹⁷ the subsequent bishop of Transylvania. While Gerhard Schindler identified him with a poor diocesan clerical from Prague,¹⁸ Stanisław Szczur supposes his Hungarian origins.¹⁹

Regarding his benefices, it is suitable to begin with his prebendal stall in Eger and his archdeaconry in Szabolcs, as these two benefices were indicated in the bull of his nomination, which dates back to 12 February, 1372.²⁰ In the volume, in which the reference book of the medieval archdeacons of Eger was published, a certain Peter appears only between the years of 1370 and 1372.²¹ Due to this factor, I considered it necessary to examine the series dignitatum of the diplomas issued by the chapter in Eger. In the charters, which were issued between 1361 and 1377 in privilegial form, an archdeacon called Peter appears between 1363 and 1374.²² If we supplement the documents issued in Eger between 1372 and 1375 with the data of the documents of the Holy See,²³ it is unquestionable that Peter, archdeacon of Szabolcs is identical with Peter, the son of Stephan. In the source base of the Vatican he often appears as the canon of Eger, and between October, 1375 and February, 1376 he is mentioned three times as a beneficiary of Eger and as the archdeacon of (Aba) Újvár.²⁴ Although, for the archdeaconry of Újvár, he gained a provisional bull from Pope Gregory XI,²⁵ he did not manage to fill in this position.²⁶ Summing up the above mentioned information, we are able to state that Peter, the son of Stephen was active between 1372 and 1375 as canon of Eger, archdeacon of Szabolcs²⁷ as well as papal nuncio and collector. To the question of the exact date, when he gained the previous stall and function, I will return later in this study.

Regarding the chronological order, his positions that followed were one of the prebendal stalls in the cathedral chapter of Esztergom and the magistracy in the Virgin Mary chapel of the local cathedral.²⁸ These benefices were donated (motu proprio) to Peter by the pope in June, 1373.²⁹ In the same year, in October, the mandate of Pope Gregory XI was dilecto filio Petro Stephani canonico Strigoniensi written to him.³⁰ In Peter's command addressed to the

subcollector of Győr between the 16th October, 1373 and 21 March, 1374, he only indicated the canonry of Esztergom, which proves the holding of this office.³¹ The duration of his office in Esztergom can be determined by a pious donation, which was given by him. It turns out from a royal charter, which dates back to the February of 1392, that Peter, the son of Stephen, former provost of Dömös, canon of Esztergom and the master of the Blessed Virgin Mary altar (who filled in the rectorate of the previously-mentioned altar for 17 years), placed a sanctuary lamp on the altar.³² On the bases of these details, his canonry and rectorate of the altar in Esztergom can be determined to be between 1373 and 1390.³³

It is worth taking a closer look at his stall as the provost of Dömös, as the major misunderstanding of previous books can lead us back to this position. János Temesváry wrote in his monography about the bishopric of Transylvania, that the Holy See donated to Peter Knol several church benefices for his work as a collector. In this way, he obtained the provostship of Dömös (1378), which was created in the honour of Saint Margaret of Antiochia. After that, he gained the archdeaconry of Pata (1384), which belonged to the cathedral chapter of Eger and the episcopate in Transylvania, which meant the culmination of his career. The cleric, who had graduated in law, finally gave up his episcopal function and supervised the convent of the Order of Saint John in Esztergom (1392).³⁴

The reconstruction of the undoubtedly successful career is actually the result of the contamination of two different people both bearing by the name of Peter.³⁵ The provostship of Dömös appeared next to the name of Petrus

³¹ The transcription of the charter of Peter remained to our age in the publication of the subcollectors. Unfortunately, the collector's diploma does not contain dates, while in the publications of his deputies, we only find the actual dates: „Datum laurini, duodecimo Kalendas mensis Aprilis” (MNL OL DF 207392, PRT II, n. 201.). László Erdélyi, who published the charter, concluded logically to the 1374 dateline of the subcollectors charter, as it is related to the annata payment of the abbot of Pannonhalma. For the collection of these incomes, collector Peter gained the authorization during the October of 1373. (PRT II, n. 200). The actual data in the publication is wrong (21st of April).

Stephani, a papal collector first during the spring months of 1374.³⁶ In April 1378, he issued a receipt for the bishop of Veszprém with the indication of this same benefice.³⁷ A notarial document from November 1379 also indicates this beneficiary.³⁸ The following information concerning the benefices is only from 1391. This time, he called oneself the former (olim) provost of Dömös.³⁹ To the determination of him having a benefice's termination we may ascertain from a royal diploma, which was issued two years before. From this, we come know that Peter Knol (along with his brother Miklós), licentiate of the canon law, provost of Dömös and royal secret chancellor, received a landed property from the monarch.⁴⁰ This makes it unambiguous that Petrus Stephani apostolic collector did not hold the provostship of Dömös in 1389. This source gives us information about the reason for the mistaken identification of Temesváry: besides the identical first names, they followed each other directly in the provostship of Dömös. There can be no doubt in the connection of the fact, that not Peter (the collector), but Peter Knol received the episcopate of Transylvania. This is proven by the fact that his family name was indicated in the mandate regarding royal donations.⁴¹ Knol appeared as an episcopal vicar in Eger in 1380. In this function he was mentioned for the last time in 1384.⁴² In this office, he was able to make use of his knowledge of the canon law (licentiatus in decretis). This distinguishes him from the papal collector as well. Among the benefices of Knol, he received firstly the parish of Scenth (1380) and the rectorate of the Saint Michael chapel, which was built as a side-chapel in the cathedral of Eger (1382). These stalls were followed by the prebendary in Eger and the archdeaconry in Pata.⁴³ He held this latter position between 1383 and 1387.⁴⁴ As the archdeaconry of Pata appears to have been vacant on the 5

May, 1387,⁴⁵ he presumably gained the provostship of Dömös after this time, perhaps in 1387 or during the following year.⁴⁶ He kept this benefice until he received the episcopate of Transylvania.⁴⁷ Peter Knol lead the Transylvanian diocese until July 1391, his episcopal seat became presumably vacant due to his death.⁴⁸

Regarding the title of magister in the “convent of the Order of Saint John”,⁴⁹ we may draw the following picture. «Petrus Stephani magister Sancte Trinitatis de Calidis aquis de suburbio Budensi, dicte diocesis, et sancti Stephani Regis Strigoniensis, domorum Sepulcri Dominici Jerosolimitani invicem canonicè unitarum, ordinis sancti Augustini» appeared first during the autumn of 1390 in the papal documents.⁵⁰ We learn from the bull of Pope Boniface IX, that Peter, who was accused of homicide, was removed from his benefices. It is possible, that the accusation proved to be unfounded, as he possessed this benefice in February, 1392 as well.⁵¹ During this time – as we have already seen it – Peter referred to his former provostship in Dömös and to his benefices in Esztergom, which makes his identification with the papal collector (by a similar name) working in the territory of Hungary and Poland unambiguous.

Apart from his church benefices in Hungary, Petrus Stephani possessed a canonicate in the cathedral chapter of Wrocław. In 1375, he received the prebendary in the Silesian church body after the death of Johannes Pelvos subcollector as a papal benefice.⁵² The last data regarding this stall dates back to August, 1376.⁵³

Finally, we should try to seek the answer for the above-mentioned question: how could Peter, the son of Stephen come into the horizon of the Apostolic Chamber? So that we may be able to clarify this issue, we have to return to the archdeaconry of Szabolcs. As we have already seen, he held the position of archdeacon between 1372 and 1375, which is undoubtedly the period, when he worked as a collector as well. As I have referred to it, we find a person called Peter in the previously-mentioned church office since 1363.⁵⁴ Thus, the question is as follows: does the name of the two Peters refer to the same person? Regarding the applications, which were filed in the papal chancery, and other Apostolic Chamber documents we may observe the following things. During the summer of 1360, King Louis I made a supplication for a canonical stall in Eger for Petrus de Monasterio, who came from the diocese of Limoge and worked as the procurator of cardinal Guillaume de la Jugie in Hungary.⁵⁵ We can ascertain from the supplication that this person had already gained an assurance regarding a (unspecified) benefice in the diocese of Rouen.⁵⁶ During the following year, cardinal Guillaume himself requested the archdeaconsy of Szabolcs for the seak of the previously-mentioned cleric, who was not only apostrophised as his chaplain, but also his permanent table companion and his agent in Hungary.⁵⁷ At this time, he already possessed two prebendal benefices (one in Eger and one in Kalocsa), and he also held the position of the cantor in Kalocsa.⁵⁸ Besides the fact that the name of Peter archdeacon of Szabolcs can be found in the series dignitatum of the documents related to the place of authentication (locus credibilis) of Eger since January, 1363, his name appeared in two further papal bulls during the summer of 1364. In the first document, Pope Urban V (1362-1370) asked for the support of King Louis I for Petrus de Monasterio canon of Eger and archdeacon of Szabolcs and for Johannes Bastardi canon of Rouen. His aim was to send them to Hungary in order to complete some administrative errands related to the benefices of the cardinal.⁵⁹ The other charter gives us information about the supplication, which was submitted by queen mother Elisabeth for the sake of the Poor Clares in Obuda.⁶⁰ These sources make it also clear that Peter was in the papal curia of Avignon when these documents were issued. In the light of the above-mentioned points, it can be demonstrated that the beginning of the ecclesiastical career of the French clerical in Hungary can be related to cardinal Guillaume, as he arrived in the country as a member of his household.

The French Guillaume de la Jugie became the cardinal of the church Santa Maria in Cosmedin (1342) as the nepos of Pope Clement VI (1342-1352). After that, he was created to the presbyter cardinal of the Saint Clement Church by Pope Urban V. (1368).⁶¹ He possessed several church benefices in France, in the Low Countries as well as in Hungary and Poland. Besides this, he held important positions in the church body: among others, he led a papal legation to Castile.⁶² Certain data refers to the fact that he acted on behalf of King Louis I in the papal court related to the ecclesiastic and diplomatic issues of the Hungarian and the Polish Kingdoms.⁶³ Among the agents of Cardinal Guillaume, who worked in the Hungarian and Polish territories, we find several French clericals. They (similarly to Peter) gained several church benefices. Petrus Begonis of Castres has to be mentioned here, who appeared in the sources in 1345 as the familiar and chaplain of the cardinal as well as his Hungarian and Polish procurator. He probably became the closest co-worker of the cardinal, as he was the principalis among the agents. With the support of his distinguished patron, he gained the prebendal stalls of Wrocław (1345), Kraków (1348), Eger (1349), Esztergom (1353), Auch (1368) and Liège (1376) as well as the archdeaconry of Zemplén, Aure and Condroz. Besides this (naturally on behalf of his patron) he gained the attention of the papal Curia. First, he received the title of papal chaplain (1351) and he was appointed to the collector in the episcopate of Cologne (1364). As the councillor of the Apostolic Chamber (1369) he went on several official journeys to Northern Italy and Hungary. The successful cleric was also employed by the Hungarian King, who arrived in Avignon as a royal legate in December 1351.⁶⁴ The predecessor of Petrus de Monasterio in the archdeaconry of Szabolcs was one of the familiars of the cardinal as well, namely Nicolaus Arnoldi, who also belonged to the chaplains of the cardinal and the Hungarian king.⁶⁵ The identification of Petrus de Monasterio and Petrus Stephani might be supported by further data as well. When Pope Gregory XI asked for the support of King Louis I in May, 1372 for his newly-appointed nuncio and collector Peter, the son of Stephen, the bull referred to the acquaintance of the king and the cleric.⁶⁶ Five months later, the name of Petrus Stephani, who worked as a vicar and procurator of the cardinal, appears in the papal document, which was addressed to Miklós Garai ban of Macsó. This bull inform us of the violation of the law related to the benefices of the provostship of Titel.⁶⁷ During his tax-collecting journey in Poland during the summer of 1373, he appears as the trustee of the cardinal's benefice in Wrocław.⁶⁸ Furthermore, the monastery of Cruciferi Sancti Regis Stephani in Felhévíz was also directed by him in the absence of cardinal Guillaume.⁶⁹ The French origins of Peter seem to be reinforced by thy following fact as well. In May 1372, Pope Gregory XI donated the canonical prebend of Eger (along with a reversion to a joint benefice) and the archdeaconry of Szabolcs for Jordanus de Blanchasorf, who also originated from the episcopate of Limoge. However, the Pope made one condition: the previously-mentioned benefices had to become vacant as a result of the peaceful occupation of the parish of Calhano in the diocese of Narbonne by Petrus Stephani.⁷⁰ Nevertheless, several years later Peter was in the benefice of the French parish,⁷¹ and as we have seen, he possessed the archdeaconry of Szabolcs as well. It cannot be regarded as an accident that he nominated Johannis Pelvos as his subcollector, who not only came from the episcopate of Albi but arrived at the Carpathian Basin as the familiar and agent of cardinal Guillaume.⁷² Information related to Pelvos also refers to the foreign origin of collector Peter. Among the expenses of his account there is an entry, according to which one of his subcollectors in Zagreb contracted a fatal illness. As a consequence he was be able to preserve his possessions according to the Hungarian traditions and sent one of his agents to protect them.⁷³

On the bases of this information, I think that Petrus de Monasterio and collector Petrus Stephani can be considered as the same person, as it has already been stated by László Fejérpataky. In the background of his nomination as a collector, we may presume it was his patron, cardinal Guillaume de la Jugie, who paved the way for him in Hungary at the beginning of his career. After the death of his patron (1374), Peter remained in the service of the Apostolic Chamber and (as is apparent from his account) his work proved to be effective. Although he did not become the bishop's mitre, his functions during his three-decade-long ecclesiastical career fastened his financial security and high esteem. He finished his life as the religiosus frater and master of the House of the Stephanite Order in Felhévíz and Esztergom sometimes after 15 February, 1392.⁷⁴
